

Congratulatory message for the 70th anniversary of the Faculty of Science, The University of Hong Kong

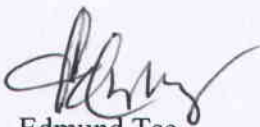

I would like to extend my warmest congratulations on the Faculty's 70th anniversary. This celebratory milestone once again affirms the Faculty's status as one of the largest faculties in the University of Hong Kong.

The celebration of the Platinum Jubilee Anniversary symbolizes an achievement of 70 years of history and heritage. Since its founding in 1939, the Faculty of Science has committed to academic and research excellence while nurturing young people to equip themselves to assume major roles and make tremendous contribution to the academic and business communities.

I feel right at home here. As an alumnus, I have personally benefitted from the Faculty's compelling vision, tireless dedication and whole-hearted commitment in grooming and developing the minds of its students. As a business leader, I am delighted that the Faculty's quest for excellence, appreciation of science and innovation will benefit the community.

Clearly, the Faculty has been so successful because it is keeping up with the pace of rapid changes in the world and preparing its students for the future. Tomorrow's leaders in academia, business and government are on campus today, and they are being trained in critical thinking, creative innovation, ethical values as well as in specific disciplines of science.

As the Faculty enters into a new era of development, I would like to take the opportunity to congratulate Professor Sun Kwok and his team on their outstanding accomplishments, and wish all every success in the years to come.
