

Message

It is with great honour that I contribute this message to the commemorative volume celebrating the 70th Anniversary of the Faculty of Science of The University of Hong Kong.

My wife, Vivien, and I are both graduates of the University and we are proud of our close association with the Faculty. I am happy to have witnessed many golden moments and to have met many talented scholars of the Faculty over the years. During my undergraduate study at the University, I benefited greatly from the excellent teaching and guidance of the professors. Additionally, I shall always be grateful to my colleagues for their inspiration and support during my days as an academic and subsequently as Dean of the Faculty. Their commitment to scientific advancement and quality education has been truly appreciated.

On this memorable occasion, I would like to extend my heartfelt congratulations to every member of the Faculty. With concerted effort, I am sure the Faculty will achieve even greater success and accomplishments in the years to come.
